Design.

All projects begin with an idea or vision from the client, outlining their desired outcome.

The client of our Bloomsbury project wanted to divide his clinic in two, creating a separate waiting area for his clients to relax in before their appointment.

The main aim was to provide privacy while allowing light to flow in freely from the windows at both ends of the space.

The client's original vision was to have a single door with two fixed side screens, however, after careful consideration he decided to opt for double doors, creating a well-balanced symmetrical design

Due to the size of the opening and the project being located on the first floor, we fabricated the door set in four pieces. On arrival, the two side screens were connected using a steel beam at the head of the units. The doors were then hung directly from the side screens.

DOUBLE HINGED DOOR WITH SIDE SCREENS

The use of a double door set instead of a single door allows access of 1760mm as oppose to 965mm, making it much easier for furniture and medical equipment to be moved and updated in the future.

There were a few changes made to the original drawing our design produced in order to make the project practical in its environment and accommodate the clients vision.

Our hinged doors feature 180 degree hinges, therefore making the width of each panel equal allows the doors to fold back on themselves, saving space when the doors are open.

The client was unsure about how the reeded glass would look, however, after seeing a sample was happy to sign it off.

The RAL used on this project was 1015 (Light Ivory). This was one of the last details to be agreed as the client had to confirm with his interior designer that it would compliment the walls and furniture, needless to say it does both superbly.

BEFORE

AFTER

Our Bloomsbury project is a great example of how something a little out of the ordinary can enhance a space immensely. The use of reeded glass and the framework being powder-coated Light Ivory are two details which are not seen often, let alone together. Nevertheless, this design is tailored perfectly not only to the project's practical requirements but also to complement the aesthetic of its surrounding environment.

The creation of a living room-style waiting area means that clients have a place to relax before their appointment.

Our Cross Bar Doors have significantly enhanced the high-end tone of this clinic. They not only create much-needed privacy between the waiting area and clinic but also add a tremendous amount of character, complementing the overall aesthetic.

We are delighted with the finished result and how this project has turned out, the difference that our double door set with side screens has made to the space.

In a luxury clinic such as this, everything needs to be simply perfect, our InoCross20 range certainly fits the bill. Its ultra-slim profile, internally welded joints and unlimited design flexibility make it the first choice for anyone looking to add an element of class to their property.

CLIENTS COMMENT.

"It was a pleasure to work with Joshua James throughout the whole process. Amendments to the designs were returned quickly, the doors look amazing and are exactly how I envisioned them. I have recommended that my partner who is a property developer should use them and have had many compliments since the opening of the new clinic."
